TALKING BRIDGES

A large cargo ship, the 'CAPE HAWK', is shown from an elevated perspective, sailing on a blue sea. The ship's hull is dark blue with the name 'CAPE HAWK' written in white. The deck is reddish-brown and filled with various cargo items. The ship is moving towards the right, leaving a white wake. The sky is a pale, overcast blue.

Shipping is perhaps the most international of the world's industries, serving more than 90% of global trade by carrying huge quantities of cargo cost effectively, cleanly and safely.

IMO - the International Maritime Organization
- is the United Nations specialized agency with responsibility for the safety and security of shipping and the prevention of marine pollution by ships.

A group of approximately 15 sailors in dark blue uniforms and white caps are posing on the deck of a ship. They are arranged in several rows, with some standing and some kneeling or sitting in the front. The ship's superstructure, including a radar scanner and other equipment, is visible in the background. The sea and a clear sky are also visible.

• Maritime English is a product of life on the ocean itself.

In 1995 the IMO officially adopted English as the language of the sea.

It also developed the SMCP (Standard Marine Communication Phrases) as a comprehensive safety language.

IMO STANDARD MARINE
COMMUNICATION
PHRASES

(NEW EDITION)

THE REASONS
WHY

The need for clear communication

- between ship and shore
- between crew members
- between crew and passengers

Where the cost of communication breakdown can be damage to property, to the environment or loss of life.

The globalization of the shipping industry

- crews have become ever more international in character
- the need for a lingua franca has arisen
- English, being a world language, has filled the gap

Tanker mooring accident

A 56,000 gt Bahamian flag tanker was berthing at an oil terminal in the UK when a mooring line parted and struck the crew of a mooring boat causing serious injuries. The accident was caused because of the breakdown of communication between the pilot and the ship's master.
