

General Register House in the 18th century

By Thanasis Maguire and Jimmy Nelson

General Register House is a historic building located in Edinburgh, Scotland. Built at the end of the 18th century, it serves as the official archive for the National Records of Scotland. This impressive neoclassical building houses a vast collection of historical documents, including birth, death, and marriage records, as well as poll data, land deeds, and other important records that provide valuable insight into Scotland's past.

https://www.google.com/url?sa=i&url=https%3A%2F%2Fwww.atlasobscura.com%2Fplaces%2Fgeneral-register-building-national-archives-of-scotland&psig=AOvVawI-\_WZy7pKcz3EPYjNWwyVx&ust=1711544106198000&source=images&cd=vfe&opi=89978449&ved=0CBAQjRxqFwoTClit4-n8kYUDFQAAAAAdAAAAABAI

Bibliography

'General Register House in the 18th century.' Wikipedia, at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/History\_of\_Edinburgh#18th\_century, accessed 26 March 2024