Dear Captain Charouchas and Crew of the Seapassion,

How is everything going? It has been so long since our last contact. We are so pleased that we finally succeeded in writing this email! Our school had closed for our winter holidays. Everybody enjoyed that break because we spent time with our family, friends and relatives and we escaped from our daily studying! We celebrated Christmas and the coming of the New Year. Now we are back to set new goals at school.

So, here are our questions:

First, do you think that the captain and the crew must be good swimmers? We think it is an important skill in general but is it necessary for your profession?

Second, can you fish in your spare time while you are on board? Is this hobby allowed?

Furthermore, have you ever run out of fuels during a voyage? Is it possible to happen? If possible, how must you act?

Also, we are wondering if the crew members always work in groups. Which positions need cooperation? Are there any individual ones, too? Could you inform us, please?

In addition, what exactly are the responsibilities of a captain? Could you explain? When the captain has to give an order to a sailor what is the process?

Last but not least, is there a simulator on board to practise different skills? In what ways do you improve your skills? Do you keep on attending training courses? Are they mandatory or optional?

Thank you in advance for all the useful information you provide us. We really appreciate that you spend time to reply all these emails. We know it is not your duty but we can admit that you inspire us and we always look forward to your email and photos!

We wish you all the best! Have a nice and safe voyage!

Kind regards,

The 6th Grade Students and Teachers
