Once upon a time, in a town far, far away called “Woombaloo” there lived a little girl called Nina. Now, she didn’t know it but on the outskirts of their little town lived a fairy who watched over the town folk. She sometimes liked to use her magical powers to make their wishes come true.

Nina liked to read books. She loved them so much that she secretly wished she could magically float inside the books and become a character in the stories. Well, the fairy heard this wish and sent her a magic book that would do just that! When Nina started to read it, she was instantly transported into the story.

She met some really interesting creatures, a pair of dinosaurs on skateboards...

She met a flower
planting anteater who was quite sweet for everyone except for the ants...

and sly, cunning owls
whose minds were constantly plotting and conspiring...

and of course, the very respectable Mr Zoombat who invited her to tea...

She met Wolly Redfeather who showed her the way to a small cottage where a young boy lived. His name was Pip. He became her friend.

Soon, she became homesick. She missed her parents and her brother. She cried and cried when she realized she may be stuck in the story book forever.

Her crying was overheard by the beautiful and kind princess who told her about Flo, the mouse, with the magic transporter flowers that could send her back home. Nina asked where she could find this mouse and immediately the princess called upon her bee friends to take her to him.

The princess told her she would have to travel through the enchanted forest which was the home of the wicked Jack o' Lantern. She warned her not to listen to his words, should she run into him, for he might try to lure her to his lair from where she could never escape. Pip said he would travel with her to make sure she would be safe.

On the way, Nina and Pip met the magical, floating, upside down creature with the long, flowing hair of lights. Her name was Liteness and she really helped them during the scary, dark nights in the forest and she told them stories before bedtime.

Finally, the day came when Nina found Flo, the mouse. After listening to her story he gave her the magical transporter flower and told her to take three deep sniffs and think of her home.

Nina bid farewell to her dear friend Pip and did exactly as Flo instructed her. Instantly, with a swoosh she was transported to her home.

The first person she saw was her dear, little brother who was very sad and anxious about his sister's disappearance. She had been missing for days and they had lost hope of ever seeing her again. She flew into his arms and hugged him and they both went home. Nina never opened that book again, but she never forgot her magic book adventure and the friends she had made there.
